ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

In the six years of involvement in the research and writing of this project I have received so much help from so many people that it is simply impossible to list them all. So, what follows is just a representative list with no particular order to acknowledge some of the major contributions to this project. In spite of that, it is going to be long.

Professor Mohan G Ramanan, my supervisor has been a source of inspiration all through the project in many ways. Personally, he salvaged a thesis argument out of my general woolliness; suffered and chided me through my insufferable tardiness and could always find time to accommodate me as his 'busyness' among his other innumerable pressing concerns. I wish I would be able to incorporate at least some of his exemplary virtues that stretch beyond this research project.

Dr Anindita Mukhopadhyay and Dr Sindhu Menon, members of my Doctoral Committee, have contributed significantly to the development of this project by offering timely suggestions and by asking clarifications of many under-developed ideas. They also happily accommodated my rather erratic schedule of campus visits during vacations. I gratefully acknowledge their contributions.

Professor Alladi Uma, former Chair of the English Department, facilitated my admission to the department's research programme by removing various administrative bottlenecks. Without her, this project might not have started at all! Apart from that, she and Professor Sridhar have also been helpful and constructively critical of many of my fledgling ideas. I cherish my time at redesigning and cataloguing the departmental library that might not have been possible without their prodding.

Apart from Professor Uma, successive Chairs at the English Department, Professor Sachidananda Mohanty, Professor Pingali Sailaja and Professor Syed Mujeebuddin have been extremely helpful. I acknowledge their contribution to this project. Professor Mohanty also read parts of my passages on Sri Aurobindo and made important comments on them.

Professor K. Narayan Chandran made an important intervention at the proposal stage which set me in search of a new direction of inquiry. I gratefully acknowledge his contribution. Dr Pramod K Nayar has contributed to this project at various stages with very important and constructive interventions. In particular, I acknowledge receiving his detailed suggestions at the early stage without even meeting him till then. Of course, that only confirms his mastery over 'virtual worlds'. Professor Amiya Sen of Jamia Millia Islamia also provided me valuable guidelines to shape my initial assumptions.

All other members of the faculty of the English Department, University of Hyderabad were also generally helpful and supportive at various stages of the project. I acknowledge their contribution in creating the academic atmosphere in the department from which this project has benefitted immensely. In addition, the staff at the Departmental office and at the Dean's secretariat, Mr R. Nagarajan, Mr N. Anand, Mr Y. Sreenath, Mr Satish and Mr Ganesh were extremely helpful and often went out of their way to sort things out for me.

Two UGC grants provided financial mainstay to the project: the UGC Junior Research Fellowship at the initial stage and UGC Minor Research Project at the concluding stage. I have also received additional travel grants from Indian Council for Cultural Relations and UGC related to the research and presentation of this research. I gratefully acknowledge this generosity which contributed to the completion of this project

The authorities at my workplace, Vidyasagar College, Nabadwip, granted me necessary leave to enable me to visit Hyderabad whenever necessary. My colleagues at college have stood by me on many such occasions. In particular, Dr Jaydip Dasgupta, has been a confidant and 'partner-in-crime' in many official and intellectual errands and escapades. I acknowledge their due contribution to this project.

Undoubtedly, my present status is shaped by the influence of many of my teachers. In particular, Dr Swarup Roy has for long influenced me in finding my own way regarding many important issues. Swami Swagatananda and Swami Atmapriyananda were wonderful teachers who have influenced my world in irreversible ways. Professor Emily Haddad too has made a significant contribution to whatever research acumen I have gained.

Friends have been an inseparable part of this project. In particular, I acknowledge the camaraderie I have shared on campus with Sirisha, Sreenath, Premanka, Suman and Somdatta at various times. Satya Ranjan Sarkar provided me the first place to stay in Hyderabad. Nitish though younger, has been a guide to many new projects. His infectious sense of humour and gay abandon have acted as a perfect foil to my predisposition to sarcasm and self-deprecation. In Kishore I have found a dependable co-walker in both intellectual and practical terms. He is also one of my most frequent communicants, to say nothing of the practical help he always offers readily. Shafi has literally offered me a place in Hyderabad; ungrudgingly uprooting himself in order to make me comfortable. Sainath was also ever helpful and ever dependable to cater to all my encroaching requests. Thanks to all of you for you have exemplified what others could only write about: you "brought the distant near and made a brother of a stranger".

My parents have often been puzzled and irritated by my decisions, but suffered my whimsical choices. I can only hope that this finally becomes a project that does not leave them disaffected. My sister and nephew too were part of this larger support system. Shatabdi and Atreya suffered a lot due to my frequent absences and withdrawals. I can only make confessions to these fixed points in my constantly shifting world, saying "it might have been possible, but without you it might not have been worthwhile even to attempt all these".

Thank you!
